

LEAGUE, SAYS BECK, IS A CRAZY SCHEME

Ambassador Davis' Arguments Riddled Before Cheering Cooper Union Crowd.

POINTS TO WARS NOW ON

"Going Concern' Travels So Fast It Soon Will Reach Invisibility Point."

James M. Beck fired the answering salvo in the non-partisan educational debate with Ambassador John W. Davis on the League of Nations which was arranged by the Board of Education and concluded in Cooper Union last evening. He left ten words branded upon the minds of his audience, and he was applauded vigorously as he indicted the fabric of the League of Nations covenant.

"A crazier, madder scheme was never hatched by responsible statesmen," he declared near the close of his address, and the crowd which had been listening for more than an hour and a half thundered out agreement that could not be doubted.

Mr. Beck at the outset challenged the Ambassador's tribute on Thursday evening that the covenant "breathes the spirit of Americanism," and then by way of rebuttal attacked the major premises of his opponent's argument. He pointed out also that not once the previous evening had the covenant or any modifying reservation been directly quoted by Ambassador Davis, and he made the contrast more marked by himself turning to the text and citing several articles in the course of his attack.

"I say that essential Americanism is independence," he said. "If America does not mean an independent America its history has been altogether falsified. I am not contending for isolation, for that is an altogether different thing. That for which I am contending is that we should play a great and—please God—a beneficent part, and that it should always be the part we elect to play as crisis after crisis arises. If America does not mean that in all its history, what does it mean?"

Turning to the arguments of disarmament and the abolition of war, Mr. Beck disposed of the former by asking what had been done in the year and a half that the league had been a "going concern," not only in reduction but in the prevention of nine wars and the civil wars of five nations, which he cited as in progress.

He agreed that the league was a going concern, but he amended it by telling the audience that "it was going so fast that in a short time it would reach the point of invisibility."

In refutation of the advantages contended by Ambassador Davis for the arbitration of justiciable disputes and the establishment of a permanent court, Mr. Beck pointed out their weakness compared with compulsory arbitration agreements which, he said, were in existence among most countries. "To call advisory opinion a court," he said, "is a travesty of words."

BIG PARADE HERE ON COOLIDGE DAY

It Will Feature Demonstration on Oct. 28 in His Honor.

Following a conference in the Waldorf yesterday with Gov. Calvin Coolidge, Republican candidate for Vice-President, Chairman Hays of the national committee announced that Thursday, October 28, would be observed as Coolidge day in New York city.

"He will speak in Carnegie Hall in the evening," said Mr. Hays. "During the day there will be a demonstration that will show that the heart of New York is in this fight. It will be a manifestation of the spirit of things Republican in this campaign year of Harding and Coolidge."

The parade will be under the management of the Business Men's Republican Association, which was founded in 1884 and every Presidential year since has demonstrated its loyalty to the party and its faith in Republican principles. The association now consists of organized divisions in forty-five different trades and commercial enterprises.

"It will be a tremendous parade. Virtually every trade and business in the city will be represented in line and will be supplemented by marching units from twenty-seven universities and colleges."

The officers of the association are Michael Friedsam, president; William Warren Barbour, treasurer; Charles H. Sherrill, chairman of the executive committee; Roger W. Allen, executive secretary.

At the conference with Gov. Coolidge, in addition to Mr. Hays, were A. T. Hart, John W. Weeks and other prominent leaders in the campaign.

MRS. CROSBY TELLS WHY SHE IS FOR HARDING

Ex-Democratic Woman Works for Better Conditions.

Mrs. John Sherwin Crosby, who said she had worked in the Democratic cause for twenty-five years, told a gathering of women in the Harding-Wadsworth headquarters in the Waldorf yesterday her reasons for withdrawing from Tammany. "It may seem strange to you," she said, appearing for the first time as chairman of a Republican meeting, "that I have changed, have left the Democratic party. But I have felt that I had gotten over my usefulness in that party, and, as has been said, there was too much asking of Charlie."

"If a woman hasn't the courage to decide what man she wants to work for in politics she has no place in politics," Senator Wadsworth is the man to go back to the Senate, if for no other reason than that he had the courage of his convictions. I sometimes wonder if it was the best thing to give women the ballot if they don't use it with the courage of their convictions."

"I'm not for Cox, because I don't think he is the man to lead our country. I'm for Harding, because I'm an independent woman, an independent Democrat. I think we need a change in Washington and improved living conditions. I stand before you a Democratic woman working for Harding and Wadsworth."
